Am I allowed to start working immediately after registering my business?

For: Trading company · limited liability company · limited company

Verified by an official source · Reviewed: 2026-11-15

Applicability: Before commencing business

Registration alone does not confirm that all conditions for operation have been met.

Organise the check according to the actual work.

In the case description, specify the activity, method of delivery, venue, equipment and arrival of the parties. By doing so, you enable the body providing the information to respond to a specific question rather than to a general category of activity.

Keep the verification results with your business documentation. If you later change your premises or working methods, check whether any of the conditions you originally met have also changed.

How to prepare this in your business

Frame the query as a concrete business case: what is being carried out, who is doing it, at which location and with what equipment. In your response, ask for the relevant authority and the document on which the information is based. An informal recommendation from an acquaintance may help find an address, but it is not proof that the requirements have been met.

If a particular activity does not require special approval, that does not automatically resolve all other business matters. For premises, workers, consumers or a specific product, check the separate relevant issues.

Example of a change of approach

A business that began exclusively online later introduces collection of goods and customer visits to the premises. This is a new circumstance to assess; do not automatically extend the old solution or earlier informal response to the new model.

Specific next steps

1. Describe your working method and workspace.
2. Check the specific conditions of the activity.
3. Document their fulfilment.

Most common mistakes

• Replace the registration and proof of fulfilment of the special conditions.

• Not checking the consequences of relocating or new sales activities.

Limits of application

Documentation depends on the activity and circumstances.
