How can you give a collaborator access without handing over the entire business?

For: Paušalni obrt · Obrtnici · j.d.o.o. · d.o.o. · Privatni iznajmljivač · Platformski radnik kod poslodavca · Platformski rad preko vlastitog obrta

Practical business guidance · Reviewed: 2026-11-16

Applicability: Practical application according to the circumstances of the business

Grant only the access necessary for the contracted task, to a specific person, and with a plan to revoke it upon completion.

What does that mean in practice?

A full ownership account is often not required to edit content. Finance, users and security settings should remain accessible only to those who need them.

Record who has been assigned which role and why. Such a list helps with staff changes and security vetting.

An example from everyday business

The collaborator edits the product catalogue but does not have the option to change the store's payouts or ownership.

Specific next steps

1. List the task and the systems that are truly necessary.
2. Use the call and a limited role when supported.
3. At the end of the collaboration, review and remove any unnecessary permissions.

Most common mistakes

• Share the ownership application with the entire team.

• Forget the old calls and integrations.

Limits of application

Editorial business guideline. The example is illustrative; it is not a legal, tax or accounting calculation.

Original page

https://adriatrends.hr/poslovni-vodic/en/pitanja/suradnik-pristup-najmanja-ovlast